Origins of Organizing

By

Prof. Evert Van de Vliert
University of Groningen, The Netherlands

Date: Monday, 14 February 2011
Time: 2:30 p.m. - 4:00 p.m.
Venue: M802

All interested are welcome
Origins of Organizing

Abstract

This presentation provides an update of continuing research testing the climato-economic theory of culture, which states that each workforce is influenced by its country’s livability conditions. Colder-than-temperate and hotter-than-temperate climates are thought to secretly influence organizational structures and strategies, leadership styles, and work motives, depending on how much money a society has available to cope with cold stress and heat stress. Special attention will be paid to organizational problems, goals, means, and outcomes as prototypical consequences.