WHERE
LANGUAGE AND CULTURE ENRICH OUR SOCIETY

We live in an age of unprecedented economic and technological change. Yet one fundamental question continues to challenge us: What does it mean to be human? At the PolyU Faculty of Humanities, we bring together language, culture and science in our quest to answer this central and enduring question. We believe that our explorations of the human condition will enable our students to surmount the challenges posed by a rapidly changing world.

We encourage our students to go beyond academic studies. Be they educators, translators, or communications officers, our graduates can be justly proud of the education they received from our Faculty. We have nurtured good communicators and responsible citizens, and guided their development in global outlook, general knowledge and cultural appreciation which will empower them to make more meaningful contributions to the global community.
