	Explanation of the appropriateness of the assessment methods in assessing the intended learning outcomes: Term Paper (Individual) Students are required to submit an individual term paper of 2,500 words on a specific concern related to comparative and global policy study. Students have to conduct literature review and conceptual analysis on that topic. The paper has to be presented clearly in an academically relevant approach; factual evidence as well as analytical reasoning are both necessary. Vision for policy development as well as proposals for policy reform may be necessary. Proposal for change and It is also necessary for the students to present his evidence and arguments systematically in a well framed structure. Seminar Presentation and Seminar Students in small groups will prepare and conduct presentation on selected issues relating to comparative and global policy. They will be expected to sort out information and data/evidence before they could organize these systematically and to make an effective presentation to the class. Students area also expected to motivate fellow students to take part in discussion and debate, they also have to respond to challenges and questions appropriately. The seminar sessions will provide a platform for participatory learning; to brush up students' analytical ability and to develop skills in effectively communication in policy discussion. Quiz/ Short Essays One to two session(s) for quiz or short essays will be arranged so as to motivate ongoing reading and reviewing on subject/lecture topic related readings. Students are required to identify major concepts, ideas, facts and arguments relating to the development of social policy and administrative from a comparative perspective. Basic theoretical orientations of comparative social policy have to be understood. Students are also expected to be able to apply these to concrete issues and incidence of policy changes and development from a comparative and global angle.
