

Neural pathways for language and language impairments

Yang Fan-pei

The lecture will contain three parts. The first part will introduce the white matter structures for speech and language processing. The second part will introduce the fundamentals and principles of the melodic intonation therapy, which is a therapy developed to help the rehabilitation for aphasia. The last part will explain how melody can stimulate and help improve speech impairments.